"Those who fail to learn from history are doomed to repeat it." Winston Churchill

ANNOUNCING A COLLECTIVE BOOK BRIDGING ANCIENT TRADITIONAL AND CONTEMPORARY THERAPY

The Ancients already knew the therapeutic potential of the family links between generations that we rediscover in modern transgenerational practices. Far from being a new fashion, the recognition of transgenerational processes dates back to the first shamanic type of communities. Their methods to cure "The Ancestor Syndrome" offer to contemporary therapies essential historical references and valuable teachings.

Transgenerational therapy brings a welcome middle ground for exchanges between traditional shamanic and current therapeutic approaches. This new field nourishes the rooting of contemporary practices as well as the renewal of universal wisdom. With the contribution of specialists from different backgrounds, this collective book presents a wide spectrum of perspectives to bridge traditional and modern knowledges.

Olivier Douville Ph.D., is a psychoanalyst and anthropologist, international speaker and lecturer at University Paris 10 Nanterre.

C. Michael Smith Ph.D., is a Jungian psychologist and medical anthropologist, Cherokee-metis healer and teacher, director of Crows Nest International.

Elisabeth Horowitz is a psychogenealogist therapist, international speaker and author of numerous books.

Iona Miller is a therapist, artist and consultant.

Myron Eshowsky is an international mediator, author and shaman.

Pierre Ramaut is a transgenerational psychoanalyst.

Tony T. Gaillard is a psychotherapist and researcher, specializing in psychoanalysis, transgenerational therapy and psychogenetic, director of Centre Hermes in Geneva.
